

CSA standards help reduce electrical injuries.

It's all about life.

Fewer cases of electric shock

Since 1927, CSA's Canadian Electrical (CE) Code has provided the signature standards for addressing the shock and fire hazards of electrical products in Canada. We update the CE Code regularly to address changing technology and operating conditions. Over the years, the number of injuries from electric current has dropped.

Source: National Work Injury, Disease and Fatality Statistics, Association of Workers' Compensation Boards of Canada, 2006

Standards referenced: C22.2 No. 1, C22.2 No. 0.1, C22.2 No. 0.4